Not illustrated. 1837 Excerpt: .for a brief period, entirely dependent on the reflex power of the spinal cord. The sound of crying it must be further remembered, is nothing but a mechanical effect; it is, also, one of the phenomena of respiration, a process which is unquestionably capable of being effected without the agency of sensation and volition; and, although it is true there are many other functions, such as voice and speech, equally connected with the respiratory process, which are purely the effects of volition; yet it is quite consistent with the character of the excited movements in general, to conclude that this particular action, crying, is excited, and not voluntary. For, as it has been proved, that the application of fire to the skin excites violent motions when no sensation exists, it may in the same manner be concluded, that the exposure of the surface of the new...
