Not illustrated. 1860 Excerpt: .your beloved pupil was fast hastening to a drunkard s grave. His image, as housed to sit conning his lessons with a clear eye and Teacher in the Cleveland Seminary. open forehead, came before you, and you tried in vain to forget what he had become. Perhaps there was among your pupils a gentle girl, the idol in a home of wealth. Her quick mind opened to the truth as flowers do to the sun, and it was your delight to watch its unfolding, day by day. When all her powers were stretching into rapid growth, and her mental resources were being developed to fill your own ideal, she left you, and in a few months was a bride. But she was Mated to a clown, And the baseness of his nature has had weight to drag her down. The intellect has died of starvation. Worn out with early cares, she is but a wreck. Sometimes your eye may rest on a little gift of her happy school-days, and all the bright future you pictured for her then, comes up before you. A painful feeling is at your heart, and you put the talisman out of sight. But it may be only to call up that high-souled boy to whom your heart was bound. You saw in him so clearly the promise of a noble man. A hard student, he won golden opinions from his teachers. The ringleader of the play-ground, he gained what is more...
