Let us follow the writer however and see what ritual he finds. He tells us that the Preface of the American Prayer Book declares that it has no intention of departing from the principles of worship of the Church of England. If the reader will turn to the Preface, he will find that it says nothing of the sort but that it does not intend to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship; a very different statement, and one which would have taken no longer to print than the garbled quotation given. We next are told that in the English Prayer Book is found a certain rubric which there is printed and which is supposed to be the famous ornaments rubric. But as quoted no such rubric is or ever was in the English Prayer Book! The author has omitted the most important words, the very words which probably caused the entire omission of the rubric from our American Prayer Book, viz., by the authority of Parliament. In other words we are referred by the English rubric not to the ornaments in use by the law of the Church but by the authority of Parliament, and this is the rule the author proposes to follow in America to-day! But even here he makes a false statement, for he next says that by this rubric we are sent back to the Prayer Book of that time, which was...
