Examination of the parts by means of the rhinoscope generally reveal the presence of masses of secretion of a color and character varying with the stage of the affection, and adhering tenaciously to the walls of the cavity. These being eliminated by means of the atomizer or Hall's syringe (using a solution of bicarbonate of soda, 3j-Oj), if the membrane is yet in the early stages of the affection, but little, if any difference will be observed, as compared with the normal state; immediately after the cleansing operation, the membrane may appear somewhat congested, but after a short while, this passes away, and the membrane appears even paler than usual. In the second stage, the irregularities of the surface may appear more marked, or the contrary may be the case, the crypts and depressions being filled out, as it were, and appearing as if flush with the surrounding parts. A rough, granular aspect is often presented, the edges of the Eustachian tube openings presenting the same appearance. In advanced cases, the naso-pharyngeal wall generally presents a shrunken appearance, its dry, glistening surface contrasting markedly with the moist appearance of the earlier stages. A sensation of great dryness, which extends to the lower pharynx, is a source of great annoyance to the patient. Prognosis.--Chronic post-nasal catarrh cannot be considered as dangerous to life in itself, but there is no doubt that its presence so undermines the system as to...
