Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: . going to bed, however, Gerdt once more tried to soften Frau Schulte. Mother, will you not relent? he said, gently; my life s happiness depends upon it. If you only knew Lia, how good, how gentle she is; and besides with teaching she would learn to become a Christian--and think what that would be, to save a soul for Christ. She might and she might not become a Christian, Gerdt, there is no guessing; more often these Jews stick to their vile religion like leeches to the skin. Mother but his mother would not listen any more, and left Gerdt to meditate as he liked best alone. A good man s love is a very great and precious possession; but on his side the nobler his love the more is he cast down by finding insurmountable obstacles in his path. Gerdt was too dutiful to...
