Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: . . . forced to do the best we can within the time allotted, and so we write without rewriting, and as it comes from the pen end it to the printer for what it is worth, and let it go forth--seeking to do justice to all, to speak the truth in soberness, and set forth and maintain the cardinal principles which underlie and give strength, beauty, character and usefulness to the Royal Craft. Thus have we done now; how well, the companions must judge in all honesty. With hard work the task has been performed; in many ways it is a pleasant work; it brings one face to face and heart to heart with many a noble, manly spirit, and the communion is sweet and pleasant; and with these cherished memories we close the report for 1884. The one hundred and ninety-one Chapters in this jurisdiction have an...
